RESPONSE TO GOVERNMENT OF JAPAN

The following is the formal response to your question as to whether the USS Ticonderoga entered port on December 7, 1965:

"Understanding the special concerns of the Japanese people, the U.S. Government has been forthcoming in providing information surrounding the Ticonderoga incident. Information concerning the accident, including location and environmental impact have been provided to the Government of Japan. However, the U.S. Government feels any further discussion on this matter could compromise our operational policies and have an adverse effect on our national security interests."
